Bon Appétit Management Company Adds ValuWaste®
Food Waste Reduction Solution to Portfolio of Sustainable Food Service Initiatives

Leader in Socially Responsible Food Service Implements Waste Reduction Process at Colleges including American University and Case Western Reserve University

Portland, Oregon, May 8, 2007 – LeanPath, Inc. (www.leanpath.com) today announced the addition of Bon Appétit Management Company to its roster of ValuWaste® customers. Bon Appétit recently implemented the ValuWaste® food waste reduction solution at four higher education locations including American University in Washington, D.C., Case Western Reserve University in Ohio, Goucher College in Maryland and Hamilton College in New York. LeanPath, founded in 2004, is a consulting and technology development company that delivers products and services to the hospitality and food service industries to reduce food costs and impact sustainability initiatives.

With the deployment of ValuWaste, Bon Appétit adds a new dimension to its industry-leading portfolio of sustainable food service initiatives including Low Carbon Diet, Farm to Fork, Seafood Watch, environmentally friendly disposables and cage free shell eggs. ValuWaste will help Bon Appétit pinpoint the sources and root causes of waste in order to reduce waste and operate more sustainable food service facilities on each campus.

“Reducing the amount of waste we generate is an important part of Bon Appétit’s commitment to social responsibility,” said Fedele Bauccio, CEO of Bon Appétit Management Company. “We frequently review our business to identify opportunities for improvement and it made sense to study waste streams as a mechanism to utilize food more responsibly and minimize environmental impact.”

“Data collection is the first step in any successful waste reduction effort,” said Andrew Shakman, CEO of LeanPath. “Our unique partnership with this industry leader provides chefs with new data to drive waste reduction and operating efficiencies, without impacting culinary creativity.”

Bon Appétit will use ValuWaste tracking equipment to record data about all pre-consumer food waste generated during production of thousands of campus meals per day. Managers will use ValuWaste software to organize waste data into actionable reports and will rely on LeanPath process improvement methods to optimize production practices and reduce food waste. In addition to providing specialized data collection terminals and software, LeanPath supported Bon Appétit with a package of training and post-deployment coaching for each ValuWaste location.
